

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AND INFORMATION ANALYSIS

OVERVIEW

The accurate and timely processing of information is essential to understand and develop effective strategy, policy and operational responses to deal with domestic violence. Various techniques and tools can be utilised to assist data analysts process large volumes of sometimes conflicting information.

OUTLINE OF THIS SEMINAR

This seminar will:

- Define domestic violence
- Discuss and understand some information analysis techniques
- Identify sources of information in your community
- Understand reporting issues and limitations of data
- Discuss some of the 'logical traps' confronting data analysts
- Workshop examples from your community

WHO BENEFITS?

The seminar is designed for those practitioners working in the domestic violence field who are involved in collecting, collating and analysing information. This seminar will provide a range of techniques that can assist practitioners and data analysts deal with large quantities of information, in order to develop suitable recommendation or plan community responses to domestic violence.

TIME

Half or full-day sessions can be provided

Other extended sessions can be customised to meet the requirements of specific groups

INVESTMENT

TBA